93 Home of the Earth Station for Communicating by Satellites. This is made up of a central control building, which houses the computing, tracking, and telephone terminal equipment. The Radome is a giant air inflated structure, 161 feet high and 210 feet across. People and trucks enter through air lock doors to prevent deflation. Inside the Radome is a huge horn reflector antenna 180 feet long and 95 feet high; a 340 ton steel and aluminum structure built with the precision of a fine watch. It is used for sending and receiving communications by space satellites. An exceptional exhibition building is open to the public, where you will receive a guided tour which will explain in full detail the exact use and purpose of this project.

TENNESSEE VALLEY

In the Tennessee Valley is a fully developed and regulated river system. Strategically placed dams give TVA engineers an almost fingertip control of the tremendous quantity of water that finds its way into the reservoirs, or lakes, behind the dams.

Much in the fashion of a train dispatcher handling train movements, the engineers impound water or release it through turbines or spillways.

The Tennessee Valley Authority's larger dams and steam plants are open to the public and visitors are cordially welcomed during visiting hours. TVA Public Safety Service Officers will describe points of interest.

The visitor to TVA will be able to see giant generating units. More than half of TVA's power output is used in national defense industries, chiefly by the Atomic Energy Commission. On mainstream lakes he will see large freight tows on a deep waterway now connected with the Nation's 9,000-mile inland waterway system. He will see a score of large lakes that are used for recreation by millions from many States.

The TVA Information Office at Knoxville, Tennessee, makes special visiting arrangements for groups, including those interested in technical phases of dam and steam plant operation, or those wanting more comprehensive information about the overall resource development program.

Information about State parks on TVA lakes should be obtained from The Tennessee Division of State Information, Department of Conservation, Nashville.
